DEGREE OVERVIEW

History seeks to broaden and deepen our understanding of the past and prepare students to engage with the increasingly complex, globalizing present. The faculty teach over 100 undergraduate courses on peoples, ideas and cultures from around the world and across the ages. Graduates with a degree in history not only make informed global citizens, but possess the intellectual competencies that many employers continue to value above all others. The ability to form questions, root out evidence, identify patterns, distinguish cause from effect, draw provable conclusions and write elegantly will distinguish you in any professional setting. It equips you for success in fields from public service to business.

HONORS PROGRAM

History Honors combines structure and flexibility so that students can pursue the kind of learning environments they prefer and the area of history they find most compelling. This program requires students to complete twelve honors hours in history, as well as six honors hours of electives. Through their in-class work and voluntary participation in enrichment activities designed to engage History Honors students, they build close relationships with other students and faculty.
